Beath of a Famous Bird. The French papers announce the death of Jacko, the famous parrot of the War Office in Paris. Jacko was first brought into the office in 1830 by Marshal Soult, and he remained for forty years at his past unaffected by revolutions or party conflicts. After time he came to be looked upon as an indispensable appendage to the War Department, and when there was a Cabinet crisis people used to ask who was to get, not the War Office portfolio, but the War Office parrot. Though he served under eighteen diferent minister, he always remained consistent to the principles which were instilled into him when he first entered the office. Both under the republic and the second empire he remained a staunch Royalist, and there were few members of his party who THE spoke their minds with so much frankness. One day his repeated cries of "Vive le Roi!" so annoyed Marshal with care the agencies which, it was I supposed, held the aqueous wonder in St. Arnand when he was War Minis ter that he ordered the indiscreet bird to be turned out. Jacko had a friend however, in the porter, whe took him "de St Arnaud" to his usual ery. The bird was then put back into his room and as the Marshal was passing sereamed out; "Vive le roi de St. Ar naud !" "A la bonne heure." said the Minister, and Jacko was at once retaken into favor. Of late years the clerks tried to teach him "Vive'l Em-
